The Fascinated God: What Science Says to Faith and Faith to Scientists Robert Zinser

There are many books on Science and Religion, but mostly written by agnostic or atheistic scientists. There are books on Religion and Science, but mostly written by Creationists and Intelligent Design proponents. The Fascinated God is written by a Catholic priest who believes in evolution accepts the findings of modern science, while also believing in God, the Church, the Scriptures, Resurrection, and the Sacraments. Scientifically literate faithful will rejoice to find reason to believe, though the new explanations of old truths will probably prove challenging, if not wrenching. Scientists searching for ultimate purpose and meaning in an otherwise unfriendly Cosmos will be pleased to find reason to believe in something more while respecting the truths science has uncovered.
