The history of Ufton court, of the parish of Ufton in the county of Berks, and of the Perkins family A. Mary Sharp

Preface. i134294 1THERE is a feeling experienced probably by most people in connection with an old house, more especially should that old house chance to be ones home, namely, a curiosity about its past a wish to know as much as can be learnt about those who have inhabited it in past generations, whether they lived sadly or happily in the midst of these scenes now familiar to ourselves, what they looked like dr what were their occupations, their interests df their characters ;all these are questions to which we would fain seek a fuller answer than can be found in the histories of the country at large. It seems very sad that mens 2f womens lives should pass away from their homes almost as do those of the dumb cattle, forgotten unrecorded except for a line in the parish register, a half obliterated df seldom read inscription on the church floor. For if the good that a man does is not always interred with his bones, yet, alas !it often happens that he himself is not at all remembered in connection with it so, at least, was the case at Ufton.
