I watched him cross the room, bigger than life, sexier than hell. I watched him move casually, in that easy swagger, surrounded by that cheering, heaving mob of fans. He joined the band on stage and turned his back to the crowd.

I felt like running and running. Out of the bar, down the dirt roads, to the highway and north. In the distance, Boston seemed to be calling to me. Come home. Home where you belong, the city said. Home where you can forget all of this. None of your mistakes will matter.

Cat Lee is still trying to adjust to her new life down on the bayou; between her bar, her man, and her family she's doing all she can just to keep her head above water. While her hot temper and her shotgun style of diplomacy might have kept her safe in her earlier life, down in Louisiana it's wreaking havoc with both business and pleasure.

But Luke Dane, the sultry Cajun rocker whose got his eyes set on Cat, isn't about to give up. He still wants Cat in his life, in his arms... and in his bed. He's finally willing to let Cat get a little closer - but that might be their undoing. As the two of them let their walls down, Cat's stubborn nature and refusal to ever be hurt again will only strike harder at Luke's heart...
