Excerpt from Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the High Court of Admiralty: Commencing With the Judgement; Right Hon. Sir William Scott, Easter Term, 1808

The present question arose on a claim Of joint capture interposed on behalf of his Majesty's Ships Culloden and Northumberland, on the ground of associated service, for the purpose, among other objects, of effecting this capture. The prize was a French Ship of war, which, with another, had been for some time blockaded in the harbor of La Valette, in the island of Malta, by a British squadron then under the orders of Sir Thomas Trowbridge, commander of his Majesty's ship Culloden, acting in the absence of Lord Nelson. In the night of the 29th of March, 1800, The Guillaume Tell made an attempt to escape, but was pursued and taken by The Foudroyant, and some other ships belonging to the blockading squadron, while the remainder kept their stations off the port, except The Culloden and Northumberland, which were at anchor at the time in the Marsa Sirocco Bay, a few miles distant from La Valette.
